The recess time is the most eagerly awaited period. It is a break during school hours generally after the fourth or the fifth period. Teachers and students need sometime to relax and refresh themselves.

When the recess bell rings, students rush out to the water taps or the toilets. Some run out to the canteen and some relish homemade snacks. Some rush to the ground to play, while some book lovers browse through books in the library. A few idle away, gossiping in a corner or under the trees of the school compound. Teachers too have tea and snacks. Some teachers and prefects are appointed to supervise the students at different spots to keep a check that the students don't quarrel or misbehave.

But the recess break is always too short and everything comes to an end when the bell rings again for the post-recess session. Yet as the students rush back to their classes, they are excited and happy for the jolly good time spent. It's like the Happy Hour Meal at the restaurant. Soon everyone is back behind the desks totally refreshed.
